

As a physical therapist at Inglis House for the past 20 years, I personally understand the advantages that our disabled population would have if they could use a taxi instead of Paratransit or a bus.

A taxi would give them the freedom to summon transportation whenever they needed it, without the hassles of making advance appointments with Paratransit.

The skill required for boarding a Septa bus is quite complex. At times, there are already other wheelchair users on the bus and the bus is already crowded. In addition, waiting during inclement weather on a bus stop is also impossible for wheelchair users.

Thank you in advance for helping to make accessible cabs a reality for wheelchair users.

Sincerely,

Carmel Levine PT
